04. TRIVIA

What do the King of Saudi Arabia, Queen Elizabeth, Neville Barrett & Denise Hager, Doug & Deborah Claypool, Roger and Dona Coates, Kenny & Tillie Machtolff have in common?

The story was excerpted in The Sunday Times from a memoir by British diplomat Sir Sherard Cowper-Coles, who was appointed Ambassador to Saudi Arabia in 2003. It begins with Abdullah -- then the crown prince and de facto ruler of Saudi Arabia -- visiting Balmoral, the Queen's estate in Scotland. "After lunch, the Queen had asked her royal guest whether he would like a tour of the estate,"

The royal Land Rovers were drawn up in front of the castle. As instructed, the Crown Prince climbed into the front seat of the front Land Rover, his interpreter in the seat behind." Little did Abdullah know, however, that his driver for the day would be none other than Queen Elizabeth herself. The picture to the left shows Princess Elizabeth after training on World War II Ambulances including mechanical service.

"To his surprise, the (at that time 77 years of age), Queen Elizabeth climbed into the driving seat, turned the ignition and drove off," Cowper-Coles wrote.

"Women are not -- yet -- allowed to drive in Saudi Arabia, and Abdullah was not used to being driven by a woman, let alone a Queen."

Not to mention a queen who can drive like the wind. According to Cowper-Coles, Queen Elizabeth didn't just drive the SUV, but rapidly whizzed along the estate's roads as she chatted, prompting Abdullah to become increasingly anxious.

"Through his interpreter, the Crown Prince implored the Queen to slow down and concentrate on the road ahead," the diplomat said. According to The British Guardian Newspaper, Saudi Arabia is the only country in the world that forbids women from driving. Human rights activists have been campaigning for years to have the ban lifted.

But what do Doug & Deborah Claypool, Roger and Dona Coates, Kenny & Tillie Machtolff have in common? The all own cars built in 1952, the year Princess Elizabeth was Crowned Queen.

And Neville Barrett & Denise Hager, Prince William also drives a little younger Land Rover.
